Vasectomy Facts

A vasectomy does not guarantee sterility

Immediately after a vasectomy, you are not completely sterile. Sperm may remain in the seminal tract, and there is still a risk of pregnancy.

- 1 out of every 238 vasectomies results in failure or recanalization² (formation of a new channel in the vas deferens through which sperm can travel)
- 1 out of every 100 vasectomies fails to prevent pregnancy³

Why follow-up tests are important

Follow-up tests confirm your vasectomy's success, and help you know when it is safe to discontinue use of other contraceptive methods. Yet many men fail to return for these essential follow-up tests.

Save time and embarrassment by testing at home with SpermCheck® Vasectomy

Fitting confirmation tests into your busy schedule can be a hassle—not to mention, uncomfortable and potentially embarrassing. Depending on your doctor's instructions, SpermCheck® Vasectomy may eliminate the need to return for these tests.
